POETRY.

THE FLOWER OF THE ALPS. Could this flower its story with words unlock, It would tell you a grievous tale, I warrant; For it lived all alone on a bard old rock, And fed on the tears of the mountain torrent;

To the Northern side of the huge black hill It had sewed itself by its root so thready ; I see the spot in my mind's eye still, And my eyes turn dull and my nerves unsteady.

The crag it was on never saw the sun, Though the rest of the world in his smiles was weathy; And night's bat wings, ere the day was done, Blackened that point with their shade unhealthy.

And pinacled there, it swayed and shook, And shrunk from the teeth of the grazing breezes But it found no cleft, no sheltering nook, To hide, when the isicled torrent freezes.

I said, thou art too frail to bear The rude wind here, thou gentle flower, And the sharp ice-teeth of the frosty air,
And the lightning that palsies the oak's huge power.

But come with me, and thou shalt find Asylum the lightning cannot enter; Nor the sharp-set scythe of the northern wind, Nor the keenest spears of the frosty winter.

So I plucked the flower from off the rock,

And home to my lodgings we went together; And the windows parried the tempest's shock, And the fire drove out the frosty weather. Twas cruel that delicate thing to drag From its mountain home where I scarce could clamber!

Fresh it grew on the stormy crag, But withered and died in the sheltering chamber. HAYDN AT THE THEATRE OF WEIDEN.

For the sixteenth time they prepared to celebrate at Vienna, the anniversary of the death of Mozart, when his widow and son, wishing to give a double motive for this annual ovation, thought of keeping the birth day of Haydn, now seventy-six years old.

All that town possessed of artists, friends of the arts, and great people, hastened to avail themselves of this happy idea; and the Theatre of Weiden was selected for putting it into execution. But, of all the individuals who had made it a religious duty to render homage, every year, to the memory of Mozart, one only, Haydn, could not assist at the ceremony; the weakness of his health, the consequence of his numerous works, kept him to his chamber. Had he but listened to his desire, he would have gone; but the orders of Doctor Capellini, and still more the entreaties of his friends, kept him at home. It was a great sacrifice to make to friend-

When, however, he learnt that his name was united to Mozart's, and that he was to participate in the honours of the fête, farewell to orders, and entreaties, go he would; for he wished to find himself yet once The healthy location, together with the pleasant and commanding prospect from these houses, render them the most desirable residences in the vicinity of Boston. The houses are in good repair's and immediate possession can be given.

go he would; for he wished to find himself yet once again, in the midst of artists, and of that public to whom he had devoted his labours. It is impossible to deput the joy which every body felt at the Weiden, when they learnt that Haydn would be present: a mournful idea would nevertheless mingle with this pleasure—he will be a work of the public to whom he had devoted his labours. Shouts are heard; it is the people saluting the octogenarian ; they convey him to the Theatre. Who is the man upon whose arm Haydn leans? Is it a relation? an artist ?-No :-it is the butcher for whom he once composed the ox minuet; it is a grateful friend.

Doors opened; the Princess Estherhazy flew to meet him; the braves of the spectators mingled with he strains of the orchestra which hailed him-alas! that his progress hither, and his emotion at his triumph, should have deprived him of his small remaining strength !- He could not speak-with his hand only could be return the salutations.

An arm chair was set in the midst of three rows of seats destined for his friends, in which they placed him. After a momentary silence, during which every one concealed those tears that might have given him melancholy ideas, Salieri left the orchestra, and came to take the orders of Haydn, who, divining the cause of the tears which swam in his eyes, extended his arms, saying-" Embrace an old friend,"-and their tears mingled.

Saheri flew back to the orchestra, the signal was given, and the Cantata which Mozart had in times past composed for Haydn, opened the concert. His friends drew near him—must a heavy misfortune be deplored?—No!—the old man wept, it is the last means nature leaves, of showing her joy, or her sortext and his tears were sweet.

For an instant every thing was suspended, but, when the most assiduous cares had restored to Haydn a little strength, the concert recommenced. Yet, rendered doubly sad, as much by the sight of a great spirit so

Exhausted by many emotions, a trembling seized his limbs; Doctor Capellini, whose eyes had never quitted him, feared that his legs were not sufficiently covered; instantly shawis flew from all quarters;-" What can be done, Doctor?-speak!"-"Thanks, my friends, my good friends, thanks"-said a feeble voice, " nothing -nothing-all is over with me."

His strength left him; every one offered to carry him to his own house; by a sign he stopped them, and turn ing himself towards the orchestra, he raised his hands to heaven, and with his eyes filled with his last tears, blessed his ancient friends.

Some days after this, Haydn was no more.

Cruize of the Vincennes .- The U. S. Ship Vincennes arrived at Norfolk a few days since, having been absent two years and seven months. The Beacon publishes some interesting particulars of her cruize.

The Vincennes took leave of the squadron at Callae in July 1835, and touching at Payta, departed on a cruize through Polynesia and the East Indies. On the 17th of August she made the Marquesus, and the next day anchored at one of the Washington group, where she obtained supplies, and was visited by the natives, who were apparently well disposed. She then proceeded to Tahita, and anchored at Matavia bay, and subsequently at Papicte, the residence of the queen Pomare, where civilities were exchanged with the authorities .-After touching at the friendly Islands, she proceeded to the Navigator's Islands, and approached near to Otewhy, where the crew of the whale ship Wm Penn had been cut off. The ship being disguised, she soon received a visit from the natives, who were all detained on board, while an armed force of seamen and marines was sent ashore, with orders to take, alive or dead, the Chief Popetuno, who had committed the outrage upon the Wm Penn's boats, or, in case of his escape, to burn all the property, which could be ascertained to belong to him. The party proceeded, under the guidance of an European resident, several miles into the interiorbut being unable to find the Popetuno, they burnt his houses and destroyed his property wherever it could be found. Touching at Wallis's Island for supplies of water, the ship proceeded next to Rotumah, and, after a short delay there, to the Ladrone Islands, with the principal of which (Guam) she communicated. From Guam she continued towards the Pelew Islands, which were made on the 26th of November, so that on the following day she was visited by canoes from Corrol, famous as the territory of Abe Thule, the kind entertainer of Capt. Wilson and the father of Prince LeBoo. A demand was here made for two or three Americans who were at Aaracolon, but it was ascertained that they had been left as hostages for three native chiefs, who had gone away with Capt. Bernard to receive certain presents which had been promised to the natives for their services in facilitating his departure from the Island. The ship touched next at Lord North's Island, where nine Pelew chiefs had previously been left-one of them only remained, two having been taken off by passing ships, and six having died-the ship returned to the Pelew Islands with the survivor, and an expedition of 122 officers and men proceeded to Aracolon, and after an absence of lour days, returned to the ship, having recovered Meader and Davis in exchange for the Pelew survivor. From thence the ship proceeded to Lintin, and after touching at Singapore, arrived at Quallah Battoo on the 16th of February, where, remaining several days, she exchanged salutes and friendly visits with the Rajah, and, it is hoped, contributed to the re-establishment of the good understanding which had been temporarily interrupted by the affair of the ship Friendship and the consequent visit of the Frigate Potomac. From Quallah Battoo she had a prosperous voyage of 39 days to the Cape of Good Hope, whence she returned to the United States by way

A violation of the Leap Year Constitution .- The Taunton Sun gives an account of a rare occurrence, the facts of which are as follows :- Two unfortunate persons, one a male and the other a female, having resolved to enter into the desperate estate of matrimony, and having been partially published according to law, the bans were forbidden, on the grounds that the parties and were not of competent ability to make a contract of marriage. After a long and patient hearing, it was decided by the Court that the objections were sustamed, and the Town Clerk was directed to withhold his certificate of publication.

Upon all this the Sun thus daringly comments: FOR SALE.

The Excitement in Missouri .- The advices from Marion County, Mo., are to the 27th ult. Dr. Bosley, who was wounded with a knife by Mr Muldrow, near Palmyra, on the 24th, had died of the wound. Muldrow was in St. Charles jail, awaiting his trial. "The result of the visit of the citizens of Palmyra to Marion College, (says the St. Louis Republican of the 31st,) is not known; but we presume that nothing was done to injure the College or the students." A public meeting was held at Palmyra on the 21st, at which resolutions were passed approving of the conduct of the citizens towards the preachers of abolition. A series of resolutions denouncing the measures of the abolitionists, passed at a meeting of the faculty of Marion College, were presented and received. Dr. Ely' was present at the public meeting, and upon being called upon to state his opinion, and the future course of conduct of the College upon the subject of abolition, said :-

"It was with pleasure he was able to deny all participation with the abolitionists of the north, either in opinion or action-that he was not now, and never had been, a favorer of the doctrine-that he regarded slavery as an evil, which could only be destroyed by legislative action, and he viewed those men who are now creating this excitement, as deficient in philanthropy and piety-that he was the absolute owner of one slave, and was at present contracting for others; and all publications which in any degree connected him with abolition, were without his knowledge or consent."
